1 Introduction

This book will cover a basic introduction to the Pyash Language. Pyash is a high precision language that is easy for homo sapiens to learn and use. It was designed as a computer programming language based on linguistic universals.

The vocabulary was generated as follows. A list of around 30,000 English words were translated into 28 other human languages, the words were then translated to their phonetic transcription. Each language was given a weight based on the number of speakers that it had, or the number of people in the speech family that it represents. Then a 3-4 letter word was generated by finding what the most common sounds were for that concept. With higher frequency words being easier to pronounce than lower frequency words.

Ambiguous and excessively borrowed terms were blacklisted. As a net result any of the 30,000 or so English words can be mapped to the roughly 7,000 words in Pyash. The dictionary part of this book will help you do so.

We will start this book by reviewing the phonetics, then the prosody, then an introduction to the grammar. Afterwards will be the dictionary. And we'll end with an appendix of the various grammar classes.

2 Phonetics

Mostly Pyash conforms to International Phonetic Alphabet, except that c is the post-alveolar fricative, where the tongue tip is slightly more inward than the alveolar ridge when you expel air to make the phoneme. In English the 'sh' sound. The y is palatal approximant, where the middle of tongue presses near the palate as one expels air. In English the 'y' in 'you'. The x is a ve-lar fricative, to make the sound, is similar to make a k sound where the toung presses into the velar position, but instead it is merely near the velar position, allowing the air to pass without being stopped. In English it is the 'ch' is 'loch' of Scottish English, a strong 'h' like sound.

The vowels for English readers I'll explain here:

- i - /i/ this is the closed front unrounded vowel. In English "eee".
- a - /ä/ this the open central unrounded vowel. In English "ah".
- u - /u/ this is the back closed rounded vowel. In English "oo" as in "moo".
- o - /o/ this is close mid rounded vowel. In English "oh".
- 6 - /ə/ this is the scwha or mid central unrounded vowel. In English "uh".

There are also two tones:

- 7 - this is a high pitch tone, alternatively can pronounce as /i/.
- 2 - this a low pitch tone, alternatively can pronounce as /u/.

unmarked words are in medium tone.

2.1 Prosody

The prosodic cadence is indicated through loudness, with primary stress on initial syllable of a word, with secondary stress on every odd syllable thereafter.

3 Grammar

3.1 Word Order

The Pyash Word order is subject-object-verb (SOV) with postpositions which is the same word order that is most natural for homo-sapiens, as exemplified by various deaf groups that made up their own sign language using SOV, and many of the oldest human languages using SOV. Indo-Aryan, Turkic, Japanese, Astro-Asiatic, and a majority of indigenous languages all use SOV word order.

Subject-Verb-Object (SVO) as in English, and other word orders are typically the result of language atrophy, where the case markings are lost, and people are relegated to using adjectives which turn into prepositions or prefixes. While certainly SVO languages are still usable, they are however less optimal in terms of homo-sapien brain cohesion, so the SOV word order was used for Pyash.

In order to reduce the risk of atrophy, the verb is always at the final location.

Here is some examples of the word order in Pyash:

| noun phrase   | verb phrase       |
|---------------|-------------------|
| adjectivenoun | adverbverb        |
| stemnumb      | gendercontextcase |
| mood          | stemtenseaspect-  |

3.2 Grammatical Mood

Grammatical mood tells a person if the sentence is declaring a fact, a possibility, a command, a question or otherwise.

The basic grammatical moods are:

- li - realis mood, for declaring a fact. In some ways it is similar to a period. For example: pyanli "love".
- tu - deontic mood, for expressing a command. For example: pyantu "love!".
- si - epistemic mood, for expressing a possibility. For example: pyansi "may love".

- psi - optatative mood, for expressing a request. For example: pyanpsi "please love".
- ri - interrogative mood, for expressing. For example: pyanri "love?"

3.3 Pronouns

Pronouns are for indicating a person. The basic pronouns are:

- mi - me/I. For example: mi pyanli "I love."
- sa - you/thee. For example: sa pyanli "You love."
- ya - it. For example: ya pyanli "It love."
- ke - question word, who/what/where/when depending on context. ke pyanri "what love?"

3.4 Grammatical Cases

Grammatical cases are for indicating how a noun phrase is related to the verb phrase. Brief history of cases, is that in human languages cases used to be verbs or adjectives which became abbreviated over time allowing for more complicated sentences.

The basic cases are

- na - which is the nominative case or subject. For example: mina pyanli "I love".
- ka - which is the accusative case or object. For example: saka pyanli "You be loved".
- ti - which is the genitive case, like "of", or "'s". For example: miti pyanka "my love".

An example that uses both: mina saka pyanli "I love you".

Lets add several more stems to work with.

- kwan - light
- kwin - give
- tlan - God
- cyit - heart

3.4.1 Motion

- so - source, roughly "from". mina tianso li "I am from God".
- te - location, roughly "at". mina kwante li "I am at light".
- ga - way, through, roughly "via". cyitga pyanli "via heart be love".
- ma - destination, roughly "to". For example: tlanma sama pyanka kwinli "God, to you, love, gives".

3.4.2 Context

Cases can also be used to express relationship within several deixis or contexts, we will cover some of the most common.

Lets add a couple more words

- tlap - floor
- hrat - roof

- ce - under context, "under". For example: mina hratce li "I be under roof".
- nu - interior context, "in". For example: sana cyitnu keka ri "you, in heart, what?".
- pi - surface context, "on". For example: mina tlappi li "I be on floor".
- se - time context, indicating something in time. For example: kese pyanri "when love?"
- to - space context, indicating someting in space. For example: keto kwanri "where light?"
- pa - person context, indicating a space/time or time/space person or event. For example: kepa pyanri "Who be love?"

contexts and cases can also be combined. as a general rule, start with the context, end with the case. Lets add another couple words:
